Svetlana Book Blocked by German Court

HAMBURG, Aug. 4 (AP)—A West German court issued a temporary injunction today to prevent the weekly magazine Der Stern from publishing the memoirs of Svetlana Alliluyeva, daughter of Joseph Stalin.

The magazine had announced earlier today that it would publish excerpts Monday, from what it said is the original 307-page manuscript. It said it had obtained the manuscript from Soviet sources.

The injunction was requested by the news magazine Der Spiegel, which told the court it had paid $120,000 to Mrs. Alliluyeva for exclusive West German rights to publish her memoirs, scheduled for release in October.

Mrs. Alliluyeva obtained an injunction in Britain earlier this week to bar unauthorized publication of her memoirs. A limited Russian-language edition came out yesterday in Britain apparently to protect her copyright.

Der Stern said the Soviet sources had offered the manuscript to a number of Western publications apparently out of fear that Mrs. Alliluyeva's authorized version was written with the guidance of the U.S. Central Intelligence Agency. It also speculated that Moscow hoped to blunt the impact of her story of life with father when the authorized version comes out.
